CONFERENCE THEME

To be a good interpreter, you need to have many qualities, knowledge and skills. As a professional interpreter, you must be able to do lots of things at once: actively listen, understand, take notes, translate and articulate. Usually, you are also an entrepreneur and therefore responsible for your own planning, quotations, marketing, administration and your future.... And last but not least: as an interpreter, you often have to deal with tough work situations that can be emotionally taxing.

How to deliver high quality, be aware and still have fun?

Awareness in interpreting means consciously choosing a specialisation, interpretation techniques, self-care, support, diversity of interpretation assignments, structure, depth, further language development and good relationships, but also taking into account the impact that the development of AI will have on the interpretation sector.

Awareness in interpretation. Being a conscious interpreter. Let's reflect on that together on 9 December.
